

George Webster

An inclusive leader who thrives on collaboration, George welcomes opportunities that allow him to partner with like-minded professionals and organizations to further education and achieve big picture goals. He currently serves as Senior Digital Project Leader at EAB, an education technology firm dedicated to serving clients, partners, and the community at large. On projects big and small, George brings expertise in resource allocation, employee engagement, and general management. He is also known for adeptly prioritizing client objectives and bringing together the strategic elements necessary for success.

Originally from Richmond, Virginia, George holds an MBA from Virginia Commonwealth University and a Bachelor of Arts in Telecommunication from The Pennsylvania State University. He began his career planning and executing web design, art direction, and UX/UI projects for both Penn State and Eagle Construction. He then went on to work for Reynolds Community College for almost a decade—over which time he continued to develop his skills in project management, web development, and leadership.

When he is not working, George loves spending time with his wife and two sons. He also enjoys playing guitar, pickleball, and flying drones.
